Andrew and Nicola

As Andrew has stated, Dentons have not given any good reason for failing to provide the redemption figure. To a lender, it simply doesn't matter what the sale price is in its calculation of the amount due. As to the other reason, being the date of completion, this is only relevant to the extent Barclays is charging interest and other sums on the capital balance. At the very least, the bank could give a general indication, for instance with a hypothetical date of completion.

In reality, it is a positive sign Barclays is not looking to set out a redemption amount in open correspondence.

Andrew, my only comment on the letter of authority is whether CRS can also be added in addition to Withers?

As to our next step, we are in the process of inviting Dentons/Barclays to a roundtable meeting to discuss the lending and repayment. I will propose this on a WP basis.

Nicola

I attach the letter we have received from Dentons. Please can you sign and date the attached letter of authority and return the original to me asap so that we can tick that box.

You will see that they are somewhat hesitant to provide a redemption figure. The reasons they give are, of course, not good reasons to avoid answering the question.

Joe, any thoughts on this and have you had any more correspondence with Dentons?

Regards

Andrew
