Hi Nick,

As explained I have no access to my bank details at Barclays Paris despite my efforts with Milleis and Humphrey. I have also been through my Hoare statements and there are no transfers to Barclays Paris. The police papers show that there was only 5500 € that went into that account so I must be mistaken in thinking that I was stashing money there from jewellery sales.

Since this account only came to light recently surely my case against Barclays was not to be built on this. Please let CRS know that there are no further details to come.

Simon Reevell is happy to help.

For now, what would be really helpful would be your recollection about the account (see p9 of the attached). When/how was it set up? Did you use it to pay your divorce lawyers?

The bank will have been aware that you were using the account to send money to your divorce lawyers. Was that the sole purpose of the account? How did you make the payments to the lawyers? Were they by cheque?

Dear All

Andrew Chesser has just left me a voicemail chasing me to respond. I will need to go back to him, ideally today, with a time estimate for the letter.

The delay in sending the letter is causing us some concern. It's prejudicing the position with Barclays and Withers.

If you can send me an update, I'll reply to Andrew. I'm keen to send the letter this week if possible?

My apologies for the short delay in replying. The letter is still being prepared. It is currently 22 pages in length and contains very serious accusations against the Bank. As a consequence, it is taking considerable time to prepare and, in advance of sending, I anticipate the need to attend a further consultation with Simon Farrell QC.

By way of a quick update, the letter is still being prepared. Simon has requested a number of amendments which Nick is now incorporating. Once complete, Nick will send me the draft plus the supporting papers so that the letter can be completed. I'm on leave next week so will look to send in the w/c 4 February 2019. Given the content of the letter and the accusations being made, it is, through necessity, taking longer to prepare than initially anticipated.

Apologies for the slight delay in responding. We've now heard from Barclays that the redemption amount is c.£7.1m. We replied that we need to see a detailed breakdown to which Dentons have responded the Bank will consider matters further once we have provided a letter of claim. This is a frustrating response, although is to be expected given the quantum of the charge.

Along with Simon Farrell QC, we are instructed to prepare letter of claim detailing the factual and legal basis of the contention the charge has no validity. Whilst there are hurdles to the argument, the underlying facts are compelling and we anticipate Barclays will wish to discuss on a sensible basis once we set out, amongst other things, the circumstances leading to the loan and Ziad's activities.

I anticipate being in a position to send the letter of claim in January. Nick and Harry hold the relevant documents, of which there are many. These are being condensed and a factual summary prepared. Once completed, I will work with Simon to produce the letter of claim.
